BREAKTHROUGH SURGERY AT DENVER ANIMAL HOSPITAL GIVES BATTERED DOG NEW LEGS

*Triumph's Survival Story and Prosthetic Implant Surgery at Alameda East Veterinary Hospital
Featured on Animal Planet's E-VET INTERNS Tonight at 9:00 p.m. EST*

DENVER — March 5, 2007 — Nationally acclaimed Denver animal hospital, Alameda East Veterinary Hospital, will be featured tonight, March 5, 2007, on Animal Planet's E-VET INTERNS at 9:00 p.m. EST. The story of a battered Siberian Husky, Triumph, continues as Denver's own Dr. Robert Taylor performs the world's first canine prosthetic implant surgery.

Dr. Taylor learned of Triumph's cruel amputation and incredible rescue from Turkey and was compelled to help the four-year-old Siberian Husky, now living in a loving, and supportive home in Nashville, TN. Outside fundraising efforts covered Triumph's travel expenses to Alameda East Veterinary Hospital in Denver, Colorado where Dr. Taylor performed the surgery free of charge. The groundbreaking prosthetic implant was a success and has given the dog the ability to walk.

Dr. Taylor and the team at Alameda East Veterinary Hospital plan to perform this successful surgery on other amputee dogs this summer.

Donations toward the future surgeries can be made to Colorado's Helping Hands Foundation at <http://www.chhf.org>.

To arrange interviews with Dr. Taylor please contact Christy Kemp at 303-898-3390 or ckemp@dahliapr.com.
